Israeli Ships Shell Sidon, Trade Fire With Moslems

SIDON, Lebanon — Four Israe-ii warships shelled the port of Sidon in southern Lebanon on Tues-day, setting a cargo ship ablaze in the harbor, witnesses said.

They said the warships had buried dozens of shells at the harbor and into suspected militia positions in hilly areas beyond the city. The Roule a freighter with Honduran registry, took a direct hit and was set on fire. Its Greek captain said that it had been trying to unload cement from Cyprus.

The witnesses said that return fire from Moslem militiamen using anti-aircraft guns, recoilless anti-lank rifles and hand-held anti-tank rockets was falling into the sea well short of the Israeli warships.

In Tel Aviv, a military spokesman said that Israeli gunboats had been on a routine patrol off the Lebanese coast when they spotted "a merchant ship engaged in suspicious activity." The Israeli vessels approached the ship and were fired on from both the ship and the shore, the spokesman said. "Our gunboats returned fire toward the ship, which was hit." he said. An Is

Personality Cult: Gorbachev Says No to Communist Tradition

By David Binder New York Times Service WASHINGTON -In the Soviet Union, where the first "cult of personality" was created for Lenin more than 60 years ago, the practice of exaggerated veneration is in disuse, on orders from on high.

Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the new Soviet leader, has disconraged "automatically laudatory phrases," says Paul K. Cook, the State Department's senior Soviet expert.

Mr. Gorbachev has barred the use of "head of the Politburo" not a legally valid title, but one frequently used in the past, Mr. Cook continued, as "an early step on the path to the cult."

But the kind of cult that Stalin built for Lenin and later for himself is alive and well along the edges of what Stalin used to call the "Socialist camp," fostering smaller avatars in the persons of Fidel Castro in Cuba, Kim Il Sung in North Korea, Todor Zhivkov in Bulgaria and Nicolae Ceausescu in Romania.

Each presents himself more or less as a deity in his national firmament, and Mr. Kim and Mr. Ceausescu even seem to be entertaining the idea of keeping power in the family. Mr. Kim is evidently bent on passing the torch to his son, Kim Jong II, and Mr. Ceausescu seems similarly inclined toward his

Walter Ulbricht had a try at it in East Germany before he was de-posed in 1971, as did Hungary's Matyas Rakon, Czechoslovakia's Klement Gottwald, and Vietnam's Ho Chi Minh.

But none of these cults of living personalities surpassed the model set by Stalin, who rewrote official Soviet history, had a city renamed Stalingrad (now Volgograd), and other "Stalin" cities in Poland, East Germany, Hungary, and Bulgaria. Nor would it seem that heretical

The British class system, in fact, is still alive and well, despite pleas from Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher -- a grocer's daughter -for a country "free of class distinction," with privilege replaced by an "enterprise culture."

To be sure, not everyone believes that the British class system is bad. Some argue that the rigidities inberent in the system have given Britain an uncommon degree of social stability.

But more than one critic has as-serted that Britain's upper class sets the tone for the rest of the country and that this causes considerable damage. Such critics draw attention, in particular, to what they see as an upper-class notion that hard work, particularly in commerce and industry, is just not good form.

"They have spread, first to the And this is altogether admirable, working class, then to the middle. This is what the gruffest unemindustrial middle class." And the vaines of the upper class are not worth emulating, Mr. Dahrendorf contended.

"Really hard work is simply not done" by the upper class, he said.
"Work is a combination of dabbling in the running of things, whether as nonexecutive directors, members of boards or gentlemen farmers, and of voluntary work for charities or other benevolent pur-

According to the novelist Anthony Burgess, the author of "The Clockwork Orange" and "Earthly Powers," the classes are so static that financial success alone cannot qualify someone as a member of the upper class.

Britain's ruling class "rules through prestige, not money," Mr. Burgess said in a recent commentary in the Daily Mail. "No amount of financial leveling will ever liqui-date that class."

Class distinctions begin with the royal family. Mr. Burgess said: "There is a fine stratum of useless, elegant re-tainers surrounding the royal fam-ily. Out of this climbs into the bosom of a family a personage like Princess Diana, whom all the world

Liked and Hated, British Class System Still Rules

As many see it, class distinctions in Britain are fostered by the stratified educational system. Lowerclass children attend state-run schools and often drop out early. Middle-class children go to local grammar schools or minor prep schools. And, despite growing pressure to award scholarships to worthy but poor scholars, the expensive boarding schools such as Eton. Traditionally, too, education at traditional universities such as Oxford and Cambridge has concentrated on producing generalists, not specialists. In the past, Oxford and Cambridge men were expected to take on the mantle of empire, to go into government, the armed services, the clergy or teaching. The so-called Oxbridge system, according to those who have gone through it, has a heavy bias against the kind of education that in the United States, West Germany and France produces leaders of com-merce and industry.

Industry, then, is viewed by some of the best minds in Britain as a decidedly second-rate choice, and this is reflected in the quality of Britain's corporate executives, As an executive recruiter put it:

Some experts believe that class differences are a key factor in the industrial disputes that have middle class. plagued Britain. Most British executives are uncomfortable with the workers, and the workers take pride in not mixing with managers.

There is also markedly less occupational mobility here than in other industrialized countries. The Economist, a weekly magazine, has pointed out that in no other developed country is the working class as tightly knit as it is in Britain, where three-quarters of the workers are second-generation blue-collar, compared with less than half in the United States. · For its part, the middle class ap-

The cat-and-mouse game that submarine crews have been playing in Arctic waters lately grew out of fears that the Soviet Union may have achieved the capability to launch missles toward inland tar-gets in the United States, long re-garded as beyond their reach.

So little is known about the Arctic, a region that could play a cru-cial role in any military showdown between the Soviet Union and the United States, that the navy found it necessary to start an urgent fiveyear research program. Much of the research is in the area of sound propagation -- how sound travels from one point to another — under the ice cap, ac-cording to James Wilson, chief scientist of the project.

must do the work of the eyes as well as the ears, providing the only clues about what may lie ahead in the often treacherous waters. But sound waves behave much differently under the ice than they do in the open ocean, clouding the "picture" provided by such instru-ments as sonar, which is essentially an underwater radar system, and listening devices that should be able to distinguish between the sounds made by another submarine Postponing for 24 hours his de-parture to Washington, where he is to attred a meeting of the Interna-tional Democratic Union, Mr. and the sounds of ice crashing

"The transmission of sound is just totally different there," Mr. Wilson said. "It's just a completely different world."

"The Acctic has been a scientifically ignored area," added Mr. Wilson, a physicist turned oceanograson, a paysicist turned decanogra-pher. He said that past expeditions to the Arctic have been "of a sur-vival nature," leaving gaps in the understanding of forces there.

The scientists and others spent six weeks near the North Pole last spring on research that will continue several years. They expect to be back in that area again next spring, the only time of the year that their work can be carried out.

"We're on the frontier of understanding what makes the Arctic work," he said.

The project is of such impor-tance that the chief of usval operations, Admiral James D. Watkins, visited the area last May, arriving aboard the attack submarine Trepang, which broke cautiously through the ice.

The admiral is a former submarine commander and spent several hours at the research site before reboarding the Trepang.

Mr. Wilson and his fellow researchers found that sound waves are bent down sharply and then upward as they travel beneath the icecap, much the same as a window refracts the sun's light. The sound waves then strike the bottom of the ice and are either reflected back into the deep, or more often are scattered in many directions by the uneven surface, blurring any image that might be received by

New Tactics on Japan Surplus

Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone joined the flow of Japanese visitors to Europe to defend his country's economic performance. In Washington it has long been the habit to blame most U.S. ills on Japan. Lately there has been a chorus of disapproval from Europe too, as governments seek to apportion blame for poor achievement.

Despite this bashing, Tokyo is relatively unabashed. It advises its partners that the fault lies in themselves that they are debtors. With better knowledge of the Japanese market, their frustrations would vanish.

The fog of trade war - thickened now by deeds as well as words - is needlessly dangerous. True to the habits of war, the declarations of commanders on either side contain truth and falsehood. But both sides may have chosen the wrong ground for battle.

The problem is vast. Japan is currently amassing a trade surplus of about $50 billion a year. This means that it is keeping the living standard of its own citizens about 4 percent lower than it need be. By the same token, it is depriving other countries of an important number of jobs. The deficit corresponding to Japan's trade surplus falls mainly on the United States, but is painful for Europe, too. There should be some surplus; otherwise Japan could not contribute to the development of the Third World. But too much is too much.

Japan says that in a highly competitive market, American and European exporters are not making enough effort. Not enough of them speak Japanese, the Japanese main-tain. But how many of these exporters speak Finnish? Finland is a country with which they are able to keep tolerable balance. The Japanese argument won't entirely wash. Europe and America, on the other hand, allege that the problem lies in Japan's deeprooted protectionist policies — its tariffs and other barriers, the particularly complex standards imposed before any product can cross its borders. Argument is then bogged down on the minutiae of import controls. Janan repeatedly announces programs to make the way of the foreign salesman easier. None of them have much effect, and Mr. Nakasone's latest seems unlikely to prove the exception. Reduce a tariff by, say, 20 percent and you are lucky if this reduces the price of the foreign product to the Japanese purchaser by 2 percent — a margin easily swallowed by a minor fall in the yea or by higher profit for the Japanese distributor.

To instruct the Japanese bureaucrat to relax his resistance to foreign goods, or to ask the consumer to look a little more kindly on them, is likely to produce a polite yawn. Japan is still psychologically attuned to a form of economic chauvinism, which is why the public accepts a system of standards that deprives it of choice just as much as it lapan ought to relax its import barriers, but no exporter should expect this to produce a quick change. Mr. Nakasone's action will have limited effects because — like Mr. Reagan and Mrs. Thatcher — his power over his party and the executive is incomplete. What is needed is broader economic action.

Why does Japan consign so much of its output to the outside world rather than to satisfying its own needs? Why has growth in recent years depended so heavily on exports, not sales at home? Because, under present conditions, its citizens are encouraged to save too much of their intomes and the government does not offset this by lowering taxes or raising its spending on the basic facilities - roads, homes and hospitals that Japan sorely lacks. Here, rather than in the piecemeal reform of import policy - is where Japan's main immediate effort should lie. And it is here that, recognizing Japan's susceptibilities, the United States and Europe should concentrate the discussion.

Taking First, Tentative Steps to Arab-Israeli Peace

P ARIS — The Middle East is stir-ring. There has been a new atmo-sphere for six months or more reflecting a mounting sense that it is time to try again for an Arab-Israeli settlement. Now, movement has begun tentative, but more specific than anything that has happened since the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty in 1979.

Soviet interest in restoring relations with Israel is the latest, most significant sign. Moscow has not con-firmed details of the meeting between their two ambassadors in Paris last Tuesday, reported by Israeli radio.
But there was no attempt to deny the meeting. Nor was there any sign of special irritation at the leak.

The Russians have realized that their hope of influencing any peace talks requires them to be on speaking terms with both sides. With Andrei Gromyko out of the way, opening the question implies that Moscow takes seriously the possibility of a diplomatic engagement between Israel, ians and Palestinians. By raising the possibility of re-newed large-scale emigration of Sovi-et Jews, Moscow can work to head off opposition to enlarged peace talks from angry Israeli hawks and their

I the Lebanese chaos and the Iran-Iraq war, can the latest initiatives for peace in the Middle East, symbolized signing of the Camp David agree-ment between President Anwar Sadar of Egypt and Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel. At that time, both Egypt and Israel were governed by comparatively strong leaders. And the United States was also willing in 1977 to exercise its full influence and concentrate all its energy on working out a Middle East peace formula un-der the Carter administration.

But today, none of these positive factors is present. On the Arab side, the three main actors involved have three incompatible approaches to the peacemaking process.

First, Syria has sufficient strength and self-assurance to play a regional role and could probably, like Egypt, engage in a peace process if it wanted to. But in reality, Syria is more inter-ested in securing control of Lebanon

The condition for diplomatic relations, broken after the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, woold provoke more con-troversy in Israel But it is very modest compared with the previous Soviet requirement of withdrawal from all territories occupied in 1967. It calls only for "progress" on the Golan Heights issue, and hints that a compromise border in the area annexed by Israel might be negotiated with the Syrian government.

Soviet Ambassador Yuli Vorontsov told Israeli Ambassador Ovadia Sofer that his omission of the West Bank and Gaza in the context of withdrawal was "not by chance."

There have been several signs that the Russians now understand the United States not only would not but could not deliver its ally Israel in a Middle East deal, just as Moscow cannot simply dictate to Syria, let alone the Palestine Liberation Organization. This in itself is progress toward realism essential for agreement. Syria's failed attempt to control the PLO, displacing Yasser Arafat, must complicate Moscow's plans.

But it clarifies what is possible, and may accelerate Mr. Assad's interest in getting involved in Arab-Israeli talks before he is left behind, instead of just trying to break them up. Meanwhile. Kuwait has announced that it is suspending its generous annual subsidies to Syria, Jordan, and the PLO on grounds that they are not actively fighting Israel. This is an excuse. The Kuwaitis have been badly shaken by a series of bombings and an assassination attempt on the emir, obviously reprisals for his steadfast refusal to release certainly sincere in his attempt to negotiate with the Israelis. He knows that time is running short and that it may be his last chance to negotiate the fate of the occupied territories. But at the same time, he is keenly aware of Jordan's limitations. In King Hussein's mind, the sharp deterioration of the PLO's position since their defeat in Lebanon means that be can negotiate from a position of strength with the Palestinians. But this self-assurance is counterbalanced by his need to deal prudently with the Syrian government.

Third, the Palestinians themselves

— the PLO in particular — are too weak and divided to accept to enter into any meaningful process of negotiation. In the Arab world, those who want peace are not those who can implement it. The reverse also is true. Israel's political spectrum is also divided. Prime Minister Shimon Peres, given the domestic limitations of his National Unity coalition government, has probably gone as far as be can in the recent talk of peace rate giving back most of the territonegotiations. He has argued, with some shrewdness and courage, that it is better to negotiate with him than with a later, and possibly more con-servative prime minister.

But Mr. Peres lacks the charisms and the decisiveness with which to overcome Israeli divisions and fears. Still obsessed by the security of their country—despate its military superiority in the region—the Israelis are also too concerned with the deterioration of their economic situation and too preoccupied with existential debates on the meaning of the Zionist ideal to engage in negotiation with their Arab neighbors.

Israelis cannot accept to begin a ne-gotiation process which would in-volve the PLO in an Arab delegation to the talks. By contrast, the Arab side cannot accept the absence of the PLO from their delegation — for symbolic, rather than other reasons.

The situation is not helped by the lack of external pressures. The Unit-ed States, after its frustrating experi-ence in Lebanon, is unwilling to play a more active role in the region and eluctant to take the necessary risks which bolder diplomacy requires. Elsewhere in the Arab world, leaders are more preoccupied with the Iraq war, the rise of Islamic fundamentalism and by the drop in the price of oil than by the Palestinians.

Europeans, now more economically independent from the Middle East because of new oil discoveries, ap-pear either indifferent or cynical about any peace moves.

Paradoxically, the main actors involved in the first stirrings of a peace initiative this year, Mr. Peres and King Hussein, are closer to each other than were Mr. Sadat and Mr. Begin in 1977. They probably share the same belief that time is running short for valid negotiation, but neither can risk, or has sufficient strength, to consider moving forward

Botha's Turn of the Screw

Still Missing in Lebanon

For decades some people have been observing the lagging pace of change in South Africa and predicting an "explosion." Others have observed that the white minority's immense advantages in organization and armed power were bound to deter or, that failing, muffle any such confrontation. Both forecasts now seem to be coming true. A profound, almost prerevolutionary discontent is everywhere apparent. Stirred by the familiar injustices of apartheid, it was brought to a boil by the black majority's evident collective decision that the government's reforms of last year were too little and too late. Meanwhile, the government is bringing its formidable powers of compul-sion more openly to bear. The latest increovernment's reforms of last year were too ment, in a society that already was for blacks a police state, is a declaration of emergency in Johannesburg and the eastern Cape areas.

South Africa is now undergoing the most serious unrest it has known. Strikes, statements, demonstrations, some anti-white sabotage and terror seem constant. Funerals, where blacks gather to mourn the victims of white is, have become major political venues. There is considerable violence of black against black but, far from being "mindless," it is plainly political, reflecting a strategy - part spontaneous, part generated by the revolutionary African National Congress — to destroy the limited forms of urban-black authority established by whites. ment, arson and murder have left only five of 38 local black councils operating; 240 black councillors, including 27 mayors, have resigned. The black police set up by whites to police black towns are under similar pressures. The point is unmistakable: The only legitimate black structures of authority are those that blacks have created themselves.

Violence, of course, is the essence of spart-heid: otherwise white power would vanish. President P.W. Botha had undertaken limited reforms, although none touched the root problem of political power for blacks. Now he is responding to the consequent unrest with a turn of the screw. It treats the symptoms, in a way bound to breed greater alienation, and ignores the causes. Mr. Botha's defenders say he has no political mandate to move to political reform. In fact, he has no choice, if he is to halt his country's passage to a place of unending tension and strife.

The United States indicated that the latest unrest justified the government's "new measures," and called for the unrest to abate so that the government could return to the path of reform. This is so-called "constructive engagement." The U.S. administration's inability to say that the people of South Africa are struggling for justice against a system that denies it to them could not have been demonstrated more clearly and more painfully.

West's Optimistic Attitude To Gorbachev Misplaced

By Dimitri K. Simes

Wa decade of embarrassingly weak leaders, the Soviet Union finally has a strong helmsman prepared to set a fairly specific course, Unfortunately, there is nothing in Mikhail S. Gorbachev's record or his recent statements and actions to suggest that rapprochement with the United States is among his top priorities.

The optimistic conventional wisdom in America holds that Mr. Gorbachev's determination to put his own house in order will lead the Russians to behave in a more "civilized" manner abroad. This is a sadly mistaken view. Indeed, order Gorbachev-style may prove quite contrary to American interests and principles.

For example, not one of the indi-viduals selected by Mr. Gorbachev for promotion to the Politburo and the central committee secretariat come from outside the traditional party apparatus. None has a reputation as an advocate of a market-oriented economic reform, internal liberalization or greater openness to the West. Indeed, these newcomers are known primarily for their rathless cy. A record number — three out of 13 Politburo members - have worked for the security services. Consider Andrei A. Gromyko's replacement as foreign minister, the tough cop from Georgia, Eduard A. Shevardnadze. As Georgian minister of internal affairs, he collected information incriminating his party superiors and removed them on charges of corruption. As party first secretary of Georgia, he was most memorable for vigorous anti-corruption campaign and brutal crackdown on dissent. His innovative use of television to build a populist image was com-plemented by flattery — fawning. even by Soviet standards - of whoever reigned in Moscow.

The conventional wisdom that sees him as a mere implementer of Mr. Gorbachev's foreign policy may also be mistaken. If the general secretary wanted his foreign minister to be merely an obedient servant, he could have promoted any one of a number

TY/ASHINGTON - After almost of faceless foreign policy bureauand imaginative party functionary.

Like his choice of colleagues, Mr. Gorbachev's substantive policies have been marked by vigor and toughness rather than open-mindedness. He harps on the urgent need for radical economic reform. But like his predecessors, he has yet to go beyond meralities. Meanwhile, the Kremlin is busy imposing his no-nonsense style on the Soviet economy. Alcohol abuse is being attacked. Corrupt offi-cials find themselves under fire, and discipline is being strengthened. None of these steps address the fundamental structural problems of the Soviet economy, but they may temporarily halt the country's economic decline. They may also allow Mr. Gorbachev to put off painful choices between guns and butter to improve military capabilities with-out risking internal difficulties by squeezing the consumer too much.

leave no doubt that its first concern is to remind the world that the Soviet Union is a global power second to none. There is a feeling in Moscow that the United States took advantage of the Soviet Union during the last decade of decrepit leadership. To Soviet leaders, cutting Ronald Reagan down to size seems both sound policy and a way to redress their badly damaged pride. Already, despite an essential continuity, Mr. Gorbachev's foreign policy has been marked by a more assertive, even belligerent, tone.

The Soviet position on "star wars" research has hardened considerably since Konstantin U. Chernenko's reign. Most recently, on June 26. Mr. Gorbachev threatened to "reassess" Soviet participation in the Geneva arms control talks unless Washington changed its approach,

The Russians have retracted

hints, made during the Chernenko period, about establishing an infor-mal linkage between East-West trade and Jewish immigration. · Harassment of the U.S. military liaison mission in East Germany has increased. The murder of Major Arthur Nicholson Jr. in March was followed this month by the deliberate ramming of a U.S. military vehicle.

· At the time of the hostage crisis in Beirut, the Soviet media accused Washington of planning to invade Lebanon. Moscow has also charged that United States was behind last month's Air-India disaster and the assassination of Prime Minister In-dira Gandhi of India in October.

• The Soviet Union has increased its military and diplomatic pressure on Pakistan. Soviet combat jets have invaded Pakistani airspace so frequently that Washington felt compelled this month to rush 100 Stinger ground-to-air missiles to Islamabad.

• The Russian leader has upgraded the Soviet commitment to Nicaragua, pledging $200 million in aid. Mr. Gorbachev is interested in detente, but he wants it on his own terms. He is less interested in diplomacy than in creating "objective realities" that will force America to become more accommodating. To this end, he has offered an olive branch to Beijing and announced a trip to Paris that he hopes will drive a wedge between America and its European allies. He would like to use Western European pressure to soften the U.S. stance on arms control.

Mr. Gorbachev is a formidable adversary of a type that Washington has not encountered before. But this need not prevent improved relations. He cannot make headway with the Europeans or Chinese without genuine concessions, useful to the United States. The administration has made clear that its arms control positions are not set in concrete. And if Mr. Gorbachev stopped insisting on a ban on "star wars" research and offered concessions on offensive systems, he would trigger serious debate in the Reagan camp about accommodating the Russians on the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

The summit meeting will be the right forum to tell Mr. Gorbachev he can do business with the United States. But he must understand that America faces him without illusions and that there will be no free lunch.

Arms Talks Deadlocked Over Which Side to Blame

bachev, might start the engines turning. After two rounds of the new nuclear arms talks in Geneva highranking American officials no longer see much possibility of achieving any substantial agreement with the Soviet Union to limit nuclear weapons in the remaining lame-duck years of the Reagan administration.

A senior State Department official who recently briefed the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Council in Brussels summarized the deadlock: The Soviets are hardly interested in negotiating away their current advantage in strategic or intermediate-range missiles. So far they are not prepared to negotiate with us over the Strategic Defense Initiative project at all. And it is highly probable that they will try to break out of the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty entirely when they feel they have a sufficiently advantageous mix in offensive and fensive strategic capabilities." Last week there was one small straw of hope, U.S. officials reported, when the Soviets suggested that percentage ceilings on different classes of weapons might be one approach to handling the interest of the second strains. handling the issue of strategic weap-ons. But the Americans said Soviet negotiators were vague about details. The U.S. National Security Adviser Robert C. McFariane told a White House briefing that he saw "a few signs" of promise in the talks. "The Soviets have begun to engage us in a more serious dialogue," he said.

But if there is a prolonged superpower deadlock in Geneva, is anything likely to happen in the other two arms-control negotiations? At GENEVA — From Stockholm to best, there might be some marginal Vienna to Geneva, East-West window-dressing agreements in negotiations on arms-control and se-carrity questions are dead in the wa-ter, with only meager hopes that the planned November summit meeting curity. This negotiation is like one of nal illness, kept alive only by lifesupport systems that nobody can detach," one Western ambassador summarized the situation in Vienna, where 12 NATO and seven Warsaw Pact powers are discussing cuts in-conventional forces in Europe. Mr. Gorbachev himself has warned that the Soviet Union might have to "re-evaluate" the talks if the present deadlock continues. So as the summer break in all these negotiations begins and preparations for a summit meeting get under way, the real underlying trend in Geneva seems to be not so much a search for a basis of negotiation but maneuvering to fix the blame on the other side

However much the Soviet Union might be worried about the American high-technology edge — and the pos-sibility of a major breakthrough in the SDI program that they would be hard put to match in the years ahead - this does not add up to any great pressure to negotiate in Geneva.

It will not be the Reagan adminis-tration that achieves the major breakthrough on SDI or has to make the crucial decisions and vote the necessary funds for research and deploy ment. That is for the 1990s at the earliest. Mr. Gorbachev will be around probably into the next century, and he can wait. Whether Mr. Gorbachev is wise to wait, whether the world will be any safer if the hiatus in arms-control efforts goes on and on, is another matter. All that the negotiaters can look forward to is more of the same. Los Angeles Times.

FROM OUR JULY 24 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

1910: Barcelona Bows to Terrorism BARCELONA - Terrorism in Barcelona has had two epochs. The first began in 1882 and lasted several years. Thirty-nine bombs were thrown then by Anarchists, killing many. Then the city resumed its normal life until five years ago, when the second period began. During these last five years 109 bombs have exploded. Fully 300 casualties are estimated for this period. The authorities are convinced that the city is a nest of international European anarchism. But the explosion of bombs is a so natural occurrence here, they cause not the slighest wonder. People expect them like rains or sunny evenings and Barcelonians are as much accustomed now to the idea of dying from the explosion of a dynamite bomb as from the typhus fever or pneumonia.

1935: British Warned on Gas Attacks

LONDON - In realization of the fact that England, in the event of war, will be attacked by airolanes with incendiary and gas bombs, the British Medical Association approved resolutions [on July 23] that instruction in measures for anti-chemical warfare should be giv-en to medical students. The chairman of the association, H.S. Souttar, stated that the Ministry of Health is alive to the necessity of also educating the civil population in this direction, and that precautions will be taken to ensure their training for protection against gas attacks. But Dr. A.T. Jones said no adequate protection exists. "It is suggested," he said, that we might be supplied with gas masks and seek protection in cellars. I think that means really that we would be suffocated."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR A Powerful Alternative

In "In Exile 22 Years, Militant Battles South Africa" (July 16) Glen Frankel leaves the misleading impression that Joe Slovo of the pro-Soviet South African Communist Party and the African National Congress are the main opposition to apartheid colonialism. The regime of President P.W. Botha fosters the same illusion; namely, American ver-

Mr. Slovo's ANC backed Joshua Nkomo's Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU), whereas PAC aligned themselves with Robert Mugage's Zimbabwe

National African Union (ZANU). Zimbabwe has shown that African liberation movements are not necessarily Soviet puppets.

MICHAEL WILSON. The Hague Ignoring Wise Counsel

Once in a great while a general, one sensitive to all shades of human aspirations, transcends the military propensity to solve international problems by brute force. Obviously General Wallace H. Nutting is such a man ("U.S. General Opposes Nicara-gua Invasion," July 1). Unfortunately, it appears most unlikely that the Rea-gan administration will listen to his wise counsel about Nicaragua.

Sikh Leader, Gandhi Meet To Revive Punjab Talks

NEW DELHI — Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi held talks Tuesday with a Sikh leader, Harchand Singh Longowal, in an effort to end the three-year crisis in Punjab state. A spokesman said the two leaders met without aides for 30 minutes at Mr. Gandhi's office and were to hold further talks:

He quoted both Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Longowal as saying of their Mr. Longowal as saying of their talks: "The meeting went off well."

Mr. Gandhi consulted senior cabinet colleagues before the talks, which followed a 17-month stalemate in negotiations between the povernment and the Sikh political party, the Akali Dal, of which Mr.

Longowal is president.
Talks were broken off on Feb. 14 last year, nearly four months before troops entered the holiest Sikh shrine, the Golden Temple at Am-ritsar, to remove Sikh extremists. At least 600 and as many as 1,000 Sikhs died in the assault.

It is the first time since Mr. Gandhi took office eight months ago that he has met Mr. Longowal. Their meeting was seen as a break-through in the government's hopes for peace in Punjab. The Akali Dal began a campaign in August 1982 to back its demands for political autonomy and reli-gious concessions in Punjab, where most of India's 14 million Sikhs

The demands also include a greater share of river waters flowing through the state and the transfer to Punjab of the state capital Chandigarh, which is currently shared with the neighboring state

The Akali Dal protests coincided with growing violence provoked by a Sikh extremist campaign for a separate Sikh state. Five months after the assault on the Golden Temple, Indira Gandhi was assassinated by two Sikh body-guards. The murder set off rioting in Delhi and north Indian states in which at least 2,700 people, mostly Sikhs, were killed.

Mr. Gandhi said two weeks ago that he welcomed Mr. Longowal's efforts to ease tension among Sikhs and Hindus in Puniab.

Mr. Longowal also has welcomed the government's moves for titie fra - Chanale le aj peace but has said his party still has outstanding demands, which in-clude the dismantling of special courts set up to try suspected Sikh extremists in Punjab.

Mr. Gandhi's spokesman, H.Y. Sharada Prasad, said Monday night he could not say whether a decision had been made on whether to extend the courts' term. They are due to expire Tuesday.

Mr. Longowal has said his party will meet next month to decide vided in 1945. The parliamentary talks are proceeding in parallel campaign. Sikh extremisis have continued attacks on Hindus and prominent members of Mr. Gandhi's ruling party in the Punjab.

U.K. Says Pressure Has Led to Change In UNESCO Policy

The Associated Press LONDON - Britain's threat to leave the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization has led to reforms within the 161-nation group, according to Timothy Raison, the British minister for overseas development.

In a written statement Monday to Parliament, Mr. Raison said Largely as a result of our pressure, advances have been made since early 1984 in planning better programs, reducing politicization, in-creasing financial control and finding ways of improving management and the working of

"By the end of the year," he said, "we should have a clearer picture of whether the organization will really be healthy enough to reclaim our allegiance."

UNESCO is faced with a budget delicit caused by the U.S. withdrawal at the end of last year. Its director-general, Amadou Mahtar M'Bow, has proposed using $10 million set aside as protection against inflation to help cover the loss of the 25-percent U.S. share of the budget.

Harchand Singh Longowal, a Sikh political leader, right, meeting Tuesday with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in New Delhi to discuss unrest in the Punjah, where most Sikhs live.

He and Heri, a medicine vendor, and Sutarmi, who sells soft drinks, push their small carts along roads choked with cars, passing shops offering a panoply of consumer goods from East and West, unaffordable to them or the poor customers they serve.

More than 65 percent of the labor force of Jakaria, a city of at least six and a half million people and the capital of the world's fifth most populous nation, is made up of people like Baharudin, Heri and Sutarmi, along with hundreds of thousands of street-food cooks, scavengers, bicycle-rickshaw drivers and prostitutes.

in economic terms they are called "the informal sector." In human terms they are among the 70 percent of Jakarta's inhabitants who live below the poverty line
—earning less than $22.50 a month
—in more than 700 city areas that development workers call slums.

Their homes are often cramped shacks or a bit of pavement near their precious earts or stalls. In the morning, they can be seen bathing in the garbage-strewn, malodorous drainage ditches near pipes that carry away excess water from the gardens of the better off.

For the poor, education is scant, medical services minimal and pub-lic assistance nonexistent. Ironically, many are rural people who migrated to the capital in search of a better life.

Like their counterparts in other Southeast Asian cities, particularly Bangkok, which rivals Jakarta in week that guerrilla attacks on gov-size and complexity, these people, eroment military positions in Panj-scrabbling to succeed at the edges shir had numed into a major offen- of rapid development, are squeezed prevails.

In boom times - Southeast Asia still has the world's fastest economic growth rates despite a recession - the gap between them and the society in power widens. When the economy slows, the castoff laborers of contracting industries crowd their marginal turf.

All the time, someone or another wants to move them off the side-walks and out of the life of a city trying to shed its Third World look. Baharudin, Heri and Sumardi are luckier than most of the many thousands of street vendors. In the latinegara neighborhood of East Jakarta where they work and live, a among them - now call themselves Konkalimaia, an acronym devised from the Indonesian words for "cooperative of the street vendors of Jatinegara."

From a storefront office, Kopka limaja, under its director. Abdullah Suad Lubis, a former teacher, dispenses information on everything from banking to habies.

Bags of wheat distributed by the American Catholic Relief Services for the U.S. Agency for International Development are stacked in a corner of the cooperative's small store. Neighborhood women's groups put them to use.

Baharudin, 28, came to the coopcooperative movement has taken erative for the three-year loan (at 3 bold.

They and nearly 750 of their fellow vendors in the neighborhood — booksellers, tailors, hardware percent interest) that got him started in the birdseed business. His only alternative would have been a usurious local moneylender.

The cooperative and others here and throughout the country owe their existence to a 42-year-old. self-described Moslem idealist and former student activist. Adi Sa-

The founder who was trained as a civil engineer at Banduna's Institute of Technology and then in Utrecht, the Netherlands, at a Phillips Petroleum technical center. said he had been struck by the growing gaps in Indonesian society when he worked in the development of the country's oil industry. Petroleum is Indonesia's major foreign currency earner.

"In our consulution, it is explicitly stated that our economy should be dedicated to develop a social orientation, knowing that the majority of our people are less educated," he said.

He and a few other like-minded former student activists got together in the late 1970s and founded the Institute for Development Studies, which he now directs full time.

The institute, with a professional no matter what economic climate merchants and pigeon sellers staff of 40 and scores of volunteers. encourages self-help projects through small offices scattered from Sumatra to Irian Jaya on the island of New Guinea.

The activist says he thinks his organization, which relies on aid from the government and on grants from foreign foundations, has reached only about 25,000 Indonesians in a country of 165 million.

ASHINGTON — Federal officials and intelligence analysts say that John A. Walker Jr. passed Navy secrets to the KGB in an elaborate scheme that apparently involved espionage training in Austria and the use of Soviet couriers in Washington.

In their most extensive account of how they believe the espionage operation was carried out, officials said that Mr. Walker, arrested May 20 after FBI agents said he attempted to give a Soviet agent classified documents, almost certainly dealt with several agents of the KGB, the Soviet intelligence agency, in what they say was a 20-year spying career.

Intelligence analysis speculated that Mr. Walker was awarded a high rank in the Soviet armed forces, probably the Soviet Navy, and received decorations for his information. "He might very well have tried on his Soviet uniform," said Robert T, Crowley, a retired senior official of the Central Intelligence Agency. Mr. Walker has been indicted on espionage charges but has pleaded not guilty.

While details remain sketchy, the authorities say the KGB asked Mr. Walker, a retired Navy warrant officer, to make frequent trips to Vienna, where he would pass along secret informa-tion collected from other members of the purported navy spy ring. Vienna, they said, was also where Mr. Walker probably received training in the techniques of espionage. For security reasons, they said, there appeared to have been few, if any, recent face-to-face meetings in the United States between Mr. Walker and Soviet agents.

Intelligence analysts said they believe that a Soviet diplomat who was named a co-conspirator in the alleged spying operation was a relatively low-level KGB agent who may never have met Mr. Walker. Instead, they said, the diplomat had been assigned to pick up documents that Mr. Walker left at secluded sites.

Mr. Walker, his brother, son and a California man who is described as his closest friend, have been arrested in what the authorities describe as the most damaging spy case in 30 years. All have served in the navy. All pleaded not guilty. The KGB scheme, officials said, was designed to offer maximum protection against surveilince by American law-enforcement agencies. The officials cautioned that many, and perhaps most details of the purported scheme will never be known unless Mr. Walker, who is accused of forming the spy ring, begins to cooperate with law-enforcement authorities.

What is known, officials said, has been deter mined largely from personal papers, travel receipts and telephone records that were found in searches of Mr. Walker's home and office in Norfolk, Virginia, as well as statements made to investigators by his son, Michael L. Walker, and

The FBI has said that it knows of at least eight meetings in Vienna between Soviet agents and Mr. Walker since 1976.

"I'm sure Vienna was the standard debriefing site," said Ray S. Cline, former deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Because of their neutrality, Mr. Cline said, "Austria and Switzerland have been the spy capitals since the end of World War II." He added that Soviet agents preferred Austria. "The Swiss are pretty tough on intelligence officers," Mr. Cline said.

Other meetings took place in the Philippines and Italy, according to documents released by Mr. Cline, now professor of international relations at Georgetown University in Washing-ton, said those countries were probably chosen ecause Soviet agents felt that law-enforcement agencies there were relatively lax in their surveil-lance of foreigners. "It would be a safer environment," he said. Because of tighter security by American lawenforcement agencies, officials say, it appeared that relatively few, if any, face-to-face meetings between Soviet agents and Mr. Walker took place in the United States in recent years.

Instead, they said, the Soviet agents used sites in suburban areas near Washington. Parcels of information were left by Mr. Walker and retrieved later by Soviet agents, they said. In exchange, they said, the agents used the same sites to leave packages of money for Mr. Walker. The officials said large cash payments to Mr. Walker for his information were ma the United States, another effort to avoid detec-

Officials said that he may have been one of a number of KGB agents in the embassy who were periodically assigned to pick up material left by Mr. Walker at drop sites.

"Over the years, the case had become rou-tine," said David A. Phillips, a former CIA agent. "More and more over the years the yeamen got the job of going to these drop sites," Some intelligence analysts say they believe that Mr. Walker's chief Soviet contact is a senior KGB official working in Moscow.

Mr. Crowley, who was the CIA's assistant deputy director for operations, said he suspects Mr. Walker may have known the official for several years, and perhaps even have been re-

Mr. Walker on occasion. They said that some spies who were caught in the United States in recent years had probably been given a uniform that he was allowed to wear at meetings with Soviet agents. This, they suggested, would have pleased Mr. Walker, who has been described by a former employee. R.K. Puma, as a self-deluded "James Bond."

"To say I'm extremely disappointed in the way the president is dealing with terrorism is wrong. "It's worse to make thundering speeches and do nothing, like Rea-gan, than to be quiet and do nothing. He is

Like many other neoconservatives, Miss Decter said Mr. Reagan should have taken military action and strong economic retaliation against Syria as well as other terrorist strong-holds in the Middle East for the hostage incident as well as the car-bombing in Beirut of the U.S. Marine garrison in 1983, which left 241

Americans dead. "To isolate Beirut airport now is laughable," she said. "Poor old Beirut airport. It's closed half the time anyway.

The intensity of Miss Decter's views on Mr. Reagan's foreign policy is more or less shared by a cluster of neoconservatives, a relatively small but influential group, many of them from New York. The members of this group, who began as Democrats, even Socialists in the 1930s, moved progressively to the political right since the late 1960s. Their ideas have been adopted in many Reagan administration programs. These include the early tax cuts and budget cuts, the drive to deregulate and limit social programs, and the foreign policy views often espoused by Jeane J. Ogarkov's Return: A Sign of Change?

OSCOW — Last September, for reato describe Eduard A. Shevardnadze, the new sons that are still mysterious, Marshal Nikolai V. Ogarkov, a forceful, articulate spokesman for the Soviet military, was removed from his job as chief of staff.

Now Marshal Ogarkov is reported to be back at the center of the Soviet defense establishment. It seems therefore somewhat unfair that such bravery has been rewarded by some remarkable critical hostility. Yes, the play has dated, just as the audience members have. "A State of Affairs," which comes to the Duchess from the Lyric Hammersmith in a production by Peter James, is variously billed as "a stab at marriage" and "a first play" by Graham Swannell, neither of which would entirely satisfy the Trades Descriptions Act. It is a sequence of four sketches, almost any one of which might have turned up 20 years ago as a radio play or as a part of the kind of West End revues that Harold Pinter and John Mortimer were writing for the likes of Fenella Fielding and Kenneth Williams.

Prince of 'Pan' on the Steel Drums

By Michael Zwerin ernational Revold Tribune PARIS - Along with bagpipes. I mandolin, harmonica, cello and the tuba, steel drums are listed as "miscellaneous instruments" in jazz polis. Andy Narell wins an increasing number of prizes in this category, which may seem like an obscure honor, but he does not play. "pans," as steel drums are called in their native Trinidad, in a miscellaneous fashion.

His records are consistently in "the top ten U.S. jazz radio airplay blists. He has accompanied several films, among them "Ghostbusters." He has soloed with the Oakland Symphony Orchestra and has in general popularized what he calls "one of the most interesting musical inventions of this century. It all began in 1938, in Port of Spain, when a kettle-drummer called Winston (Spree) Simon found a deal in the bottom of his garbage can. Knocking it out with a hammer, he heard the blows make different notes as the shape of the dent changed. He hammered out a scale with new dents of varying sizes. The following year garbage can bands were the rage of the Mardi Gras festival. Their nonstandard shape and cheap metal, however, clanged with unstable intonation. After World War II, the U. S. Army solved the problem by leaving behind moun-tains of sturdy oil drums. Steel bands grew to as many as 100 pieces, with sections from bass to the higher-pitched "tenor" and "melody" pans, depending on how much of the oil drum's depth was utilized. Rehearsing in "panyards," the bands played increasingly complex instrumental calypso (another Trinidadian product); the best of them now perform Mozart and 1000 Schubert as well. Trinidadians believe they invented the first new instrument since the saxophone. Every neighborhood and school has its steel band.

His custom-made twoand-a-half-octave melody pan can sound like a synthesizer program, or the African instrument called the balaphon, or perhaps a set of dampened chimes. While there is a frequent Latin flavor, the rhythm has a jazz feel, often an easy-listen-ing "crossover" variety. The electronic and flute tweets are sometimes reminiscent of Olivier

Above all, Narell said, he wants to avoid the "ethnic" bins in record stores: "If you play synthesizer, the last place you want to be is in the synthesizer bin. In my case it's the Caribbean bin. Death!" .

Narell wrote and recorded an hour of music for a yet-to-be-released Jane Fonda workout video that he says has "a funky reggae feel." He has composed commercials for Apple Computer and conducts workshops at the growing number of universities that include steel drums as part of their percussion programs.

The instrument turned out to be perfect for suspense scenes in the Eddie Murphy movie "48 Hrs." Narell's role was "to create tension. I'd be playing along and all of a sudden the conductor would shout, 'Improvise!' And I'd just go crazy behind a shootout."

During the carnival of 1946, Spree Simon played a Calypso tune, a hymn, "God Save the Queen" and a classical piece on his melody pan. The governor, some ministers and many dignitaries were in the audience. The applause was deafening. "From there onwards," Simon wrote, "there was no stopping. Pan had graduated."

Stocks Retreat in Late Selling

NEW YORK - Late selling on the New York Stock Exchange turned a midday stock market rally into a rout Tuesday in very heavy trading.

Earlier in the session prices moved higher on buying inspired at least partly by the view that the U.S. economy and corporate earnings promised to pick up in the second half of the year. Technology issues, including bellwether IBM, led the advance, though their strength later dissipated later dissipated.

The Dow Jones industrial average ended with loss of 5.83 to 1,351.31.

The worst performances were concentrated among utility issues.

The Dow utility average, burt by the conviction that interest rates will not fall in the neartern and may firm slightly, fell 5.39 to 159.26.

As institutions balled out of this sector, the utility index lost 3.27 percent of its value, the worst loss since April 23, 1974, when it suffered a 4.8-percent decline.

Analysts said some buying interest had begun to shift from stocks that tend to do well in any economic environment into some of the stocks that need and would benefit from an economic

WASHINGTON --- One of the most ambitious campaigns to market a foreign auto since the Volkswagen Beetle arrived here in 1949 will begin in Washington and Baltimore next month.

Ambitions? Call it audacious. Consider: A Yu-goslav auto maker, Zavodi Crvena Zastava, will send the first of an annual U.S. allotment of 40,000 minicars to Baltimore Harbor by Aug. 14.

The cars, tiny 1.1-liter, four-cylinder, four-speed manual-transmission jobs called Yugos, will go on sale Aug. 26 at Washington's Capital City Motor Cars. It will be the first dealer in the United States to officially offer the new imports, according to the Yugoslav Embassy.

The cars will carry a port-of-entry price of $3,990, but destination charges in the Washington area could boost that base price to $4,215. An AM radio might get the price up to about $4,300. Adding an air conditioner would put the sticker into the $4,900 range before taxes, title and other locally applicable fees.

But buyers who could live without a radio and cool air conceivably could drive away for under $4,500. That's nearly $1,000 less than the average price of a three-year-old used car in the Washington area, and less than the 1985 base price of $5,195 for the Mazda GLC three-door model, one

"You can put this car on your MasterCharge Card," said Wayne Phillips, general manager of Capital City Motor Cars, "We're going to get a lot of people who've been shut out of the market by new-car prices, and we're going to get people who can't get into used cars, too."

But Mr. Phillips and William E. Prior, president of the Montvale, New Jersey-based Yugo America Inc., said their strategy was not limited to the

Inc., said their strategy was not limited to the selling price.

"We're offering a good value," said Mr. Pricr, who was in Washington last week with several Yugoslavian government officials to inaugurate Capital City Motor as Yugo's "Dealer No. I."

The estimated 54 dealers who will start selling Yugos in the Northeast are being urged to market the minicars as entry-level, basic transportation.

"The engine and transmission in this car are besically elementary. But they're bullet-proof. They're durable. People in Yugoslavia have to hang onto their cars a long, long time. The cars have to last," Mr. Prior said.

NEW YORK - Atlantic Richfield Co. reported on Tuesday a record quarterly loss for an oil company, a $1.1 billion deficit in the second quarter that resulted from a previously announced deci-sion to streamline its business.

Arco's loss, which also was one of the biggest in the history of any company in the United States, had been expected because of an earlier decision to take a one-time-only $1.5-billion charge against earnings for retrenchments that include getting out of the business of selling gasoline on the East Coast.

Meanwhile, Exson Corp., the world's largest industrial company, said its profit tumbled 44.8 percent as it set up a contingency fund for losses that may result from a court judgment, now being appealed, that it overpriced crude oil between 1975 and 1981.

implemented to escape from two hostile takeover bids.

The reports Tuesday were a con-trast to the double-digit gains an-nounced Monday by four large oil companies as a result of a rise in gasoline prices despite a worldwide drop in crude oil prices. Areo said the loss of $1.099 bil-

ion came on revenue of $5.771 billion, compared with a profit of $406 million, or $1.57 a share, on revenue of $6.093 billion a year

The loss trailed the record $4.87 billion loss posted in the fourth quarter of 1983 by American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which had resulted from bookkeeping changes to revalue assets before the break-up of the Bell System. But it was almost as big as the $1.16 billion loss reported in the second quarter of 1984 by Continental Illinois Corp. and the $1.15 billion loss in the fourth quarter of 1982 reported by Bethlehem Steel Corp. . . Arco said its profit from con-tinning operations, which exclude extraordinary charges, would have been $402 million, or $1.79 a share. compared with $455 million, or

$1.76 a share, a year earlier. Sanford Margoshes, an oil industry analyst at the securities firm Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. in New York, said the huge loss was not a cause for alarm because it represented a program "designed to improve the efficiency of operations by getting rid of parts of the business that didn't fit."

But he also said Arco may have gone too far by raising its debt burden to 55 percent of assets from 26 percent last year at a time when (Continued on Page 11, Col. 7)

DETROIT - General Motors Corp. reported on Tuesday a 27.9percent drop in net income for the second quarter of 1985, citing the second quarter of 1985, citing the impact of future model programs, sales incentive programs and last year's acquisition of the computer company. EDS Corp.

Net income for the quarter amounted to almost $1.16 billion, down from $14 billion proported in down from $1.6 billion reported in the second quarter of 1984. Earnings per share were $3.52, a 31-percent drop from $5.09 a share reported a year ago.

Sales for the quarter reached a record $25 billion, up 16 percent from $21.6 billion in the 1984 second quarter.

Roger B. Smith, GM chairman, and F. James McDonald, the president, said in a statement that the company was "still feeling the impact of front-loaded future model programs as well as costs related to the EDS implementation and re-cent sales incentive campaigns to stimulate the market."

For the first six months of 1985. GM reported a net income of $2.23 billion, down 30.7 percent from $3.22 billion in the first half of 1984. Per share income declined to $6.78 from $10.20 a share in 1984. Sales were a record $49.2 billion, up almost 11 percent from $44.4 billion a year ago.

Commodore Pins Hopes on Amiga

By David E. Sanger
New York Times Service
NEW YORK — In the first introduction of a major home com-puter system since IBM brought out its ill-fated PCir two years ago, Commodore International Ltd. on Tuesday displayed its long-awaited Amiga, hoping the machine's dazzling color graphics and stareo sound capability will stem Commo-dore's multimillion-dollar losses.

The Amiga marks a sharp change in strategy for Commodore. It will carry a base price of about $1,400, much more expensive than the Commodore 64 that put the company's logotype in millions of living rooms. Company officials say it is aimed not only at home users but small businesses and students, making it a compenior of Apple Computer Inc.'s Macintosh ics and are built around the same microprocessor. But unlike the Macintosh, the Amiga's graphics are in color, and retailers and consaltants who have seen the results describe them as stunning. Until be available when the machine goes now, they contend, computer-genon the market in September. erated drawings of the Amiga's quality and resolution were available only on $10,000 engineering

"People who haven't said anything nice about a home computer in three years rave about the Amiga said Bennett Wiseman, an analyst for infocurp, a market research group in Capertino, Califor-nia. This is the kind of computer that people really get excited about. But these days, that is no guarantee

Right now, a gnarantee is precisely what Commodore needs. In the quarter ended in March, Commodern lost $20.8 million.

The basic Amiga model will come with 256,000 bytes, or characters, of internal memory, but the machine is designed to handle up to 8 million bytes in later versions. About 27 software packages will

At $1,400, the machine's price could be a problem, analysts say. Like the PGr, it may prove far too expensive for the home user. But Clive Smith, a Commodore execurive, disagrees. "This machine is really targeted at small businesses and professionals who will want to work at home," he said. "Undoubtedly some people will use it for entertainment and education, but that is not the main market."

Analysis are skeptical, but say Commodore should be able to sell 50,000 to 100,000 units by the end of the year. That figure depends partly on how many computer re-milers agree to carry the machine.

Danish Bank Names New York Branch Head

By Brenda Hagerty International Revald Tribune

LONDON - Copenhagen Handelsbank A/S, one of the largest commercial banks in Denmark, has announced the composition of the top management of the branch that it plans to open in New York in

The bank said it has recruited Werner Stange, a senior vice president at Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, to serve as general manager of the new branch, its fourth overseas. Mr. Stange set up Morgan's offices in Zurich and He will be assisted by Bent Hansen, who has been appointed depu-ty general manager of the branch. Since August 1983, Mr. Hansen has been responsible for Nordic American Banking Cosp.'s Danish desk.

The establishment of the New York branch is a result of Copenhagen Handelsbank's decision earlier this year to sell its 25-percent stake in the New York-based con-sortium, Nordic American Banking and the bank's continuing in-ternational expansion, which in 1984 led to the opening of its other overseas branches in London, Los Angeles and Singapore.

KLM Orders 10 Airliners From Boeing

The Associated Press AMSTERDAM - KLM, the Dutch national airline, has ordered 10 Boeing 737 passenger planes to replace part of its medium-range fleet, the airline announced Tues-

The value of the order, the first purchase of Boeing jets by KLM, is estimated at 1.1 billion guilders ($338.3 million), according to an airline spokesman.

The 737-300 airplanes, which carry 124 passengers, will burn 25 percent less fuel than the Douglas DC-9s they are to gradually replace, beginning next year, said the

Earlier this year, KLM management decided to replace its fleet of DC-9s with two types of aircraft, one for low-density short routes, and one for busier medium ranges.

In May, the airline announced that it had ordered 10 Dutch-built Fokker F-100 passenger planes for its shorter routes. The KLM spokesman said the Boeing 737s would be used on the airline's Eu-

NEW YORK — The dollar rebounded in New York after nervous and volatile trading Tuesday but dealers said downward pressure remained despite favorable factors for the dollar.

factors for the dollar. European trading.

"The dollar still feels weak," said James McGroarty, vice president at Discount Corp. of New York. "We have to consolidate before it moves lower, but there is growing evidence that the dollar's retreat has more significance than we were willing to attach to it."

The volatility in New York was caused by traders and speculators, but dealers said the longer-term downward trend was attributable to some good selling by overseas institutions, such as pension funds and trust accounts.

ACTS OF WILL: The Life and Work of Otto Rank

By E. James Lieberman. 485 pages. $24.95. The Free Press, 866 Third Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Paul Roazen

OTTO RANK was a brilliant psychologist, one of the founders of 20th-century depth psychology. He stands with Freud, Jung and Adler as an explorer of the unconscious, but has only now been rewarded with a comprehensive biography. Before the falling out be-tween Rank and Freud in the mid-1920s, Rank had spent far longer in Freud's circle than any other of the so-called dissidents in the history of psychoanalysis. Rank was the first Freudian to analyze art. He was full of fascinating ideas, though he expressed himself in prose that proved too dense for most readers.

For almost 20 years, he functioned in Vienna as Freud's personal favorite. He served as Freud's assistant and secretary to the Vienna Psychoanalytic Society, as well as undertaking his own writings. Rank was so close to Freud as to be almost a son, and the other psychoanalytic leaders were jealous of his special position.

Once Freud fell ill with cancer in 1923, there was bound to be a problem with his chosen successor, for, contrary to expectations. Freud successor, for, contrary to expectations, Frend lived on for 16 years, As he struggled to hold Rank within the psychoanalytic movement, other analysis, especially Ernest Jones, stigmatized every original idea of Rank's as heresy. Eventually, Rank established his own following, notably at the Pennsylvania School of Social Work. As a therapist, he was far more extending the contraction of the description of the contraction of the description of the optimistic than orthodox analysts of the time. He advocated shorter analyses, and the use of termination dates, as a way of speeding psy-chotherapy. He was altogether more interested in the here-and-now of his patients than the Preudian ideal of reconstructing the past.

He sounds like a contemporary of ours in his dubiousness about the therapeutic power of rational insight. He highlighted the significance of emotional reliving rather than the place of reason in therapy. He was a pioneer in revising Freud's notions of female psychology, and in recommending an attitude to "cure" and in recommending an attitude to "cure' that was flexible instead of static.

E. James Lieberman not only revives the human meaning of Rank's concepts but documents an important chapter in the history of psychoanalysis, for, once out of the fold of Freud's faithful followers, Rank was branded

A Horse Only Time Could Beat

WASHINGTON - When fumre generations of racing fans look back on John Henry, they will be most impressed by the statistics he

Few horses — even grant form to the past like Kelso and forego — were so consistent and durable. John Henry raced 83 times are eight-year career and over an eight-year career and scored 39 victories, most of them in top-class competition.

And even if inflation and bonus payments make million-dollar earnings commonplace in the fumre, few thoroughbreds are going to approach John Henry's bankroll of $6.597,947.

But cold numbers don't bear common John the cold numbers don't bear cold numbers don't b significance in the sport. In an era when the cost of thoroughbreds has skyrocketed and only the superrich can afford the best-bred horses, he was a reminder that the little man still can strike it rich in racing. He was proof, too, that the comball t qualities of heart, courage and competitiveness sometimes can overcome a humble pedigree.

The only thing John Henry couldn't overcome, ultimately, was aga. He injured a tendon last week How to the Misming in California for his start as a 10-year-old, and while trainer Ron McAnally pro-ACTE AND FAST FAST while trainer Kun Macranary pro-fessed hope that the gelding could make another comeback, he had to know that this was the end. So, too. did his owner, Sam Rubin.

When McAnally explained the nature of the injury, Rubin told him. "We've come a long way and we've had a lot of good times. Good things don't last forever."
On Sunday, Rubin called McAnally from New York with his deci-sion: John Henry would be retired. , and he mank john Heary would take the retirement?

"Probably not well," said Rubin. "He lives for racing. Besides, John Henry doesn't like me. Never did. He'll bite me and almost everybody else who comes near him, except Ron and his groom, José, and the stable boy, Louie. But when he's grazing, at about 3 in the afteracon, you can sometimes go over and he'll let you per him. I do. I'm hankful for small favors."

What made John Henry so good? How could a horse who sold originally for $1,100 (and eventually cost Rubin $25,000) go on to dominate U.S. racing?

McAnally has always insisted that John Henry was an unusually intelligent racehorse, and his record suggests that he did learn from imperience. Other horses might have this capability, but the good ones usually are retired to stud so quickly that they don't get a chance to show what they could accomplish in the long, long run. As a gelding, John Henry did.

John Henry never showed much ability until he was introduced to burf racing as a 3-year-old; before then he even had lost a $20,000 caiming race on the dirt. He did dereafter, and when he won his first Eclipse award at the age of 5, he was considered strictly a turi specialist. But during the next year two most prestigious races for older

John Henry was smart in competition, too. Some great horses have only one running style and are limited accordingly, but John Henry could do anything. Although obstreperous in the mornings, he was perfectly tractable for jockeys who rode him in the afternoon.

If there wasn't much speed in a field, John Henry could go to the front. If a speed duel developed, he would patiently sit behind the lead-ers and let them blow each other out. If necessary, he could come from far off the pace, as he did in last fall's Ballantine Classic at the Meadowlands, which proved to be the last race of his career.

"Ve thought John was sick that night," said Rubin. "In his stall his head almost touched the floor. Usually, it takes three or four people to saddle John, but now nobody had to hold him. And he walked around like a shlumo

Well, the race starts and he's 15 lengths behind. We look at each other in the box, and I say, 'I don't believe this. Something's wrong with this horse. Then lo and behold, he starts to fly. Next thing I know he's at the head of the stretch and measuring the horses in front of him, about eight of 'em.

"Chris McCarron, his jockey, won't hit him. He knows John doesn't like the whip. And Chris has said that if there's a hole, horses on the dirt; the Santa Anita John'll find it himself. He's that Handicap and the Jockey Club kind of competitor. But Chris will surrender — except to the inevita-Gold Cup. Maturity and experi-check at him to maybe remind him. bility of growing old. (WP, NYT)

"Now John comes around and takes off down the stretch. He passes all the horses and wins going away by 21/4 lengths and equals the track record."

"There was never an explanation of what was wrong with John be-fore the race," said Rubin. "It was a mystery. And I don't think anyone imagined that he would never race again."

John Henry was helped by the proliferation of big-money grass races during his career, top horses of previous generations had to run mostly on the dirt to earn big money, and the harder surfaces took a greater physical toll on them. John Henry was abetted, too, by the craven racing secretaries at the tracks where he campaigned.

Rather than risk losing a big box-office attraction, they would give him soft weight assignments for handicap races in order to en-tice him. So while Kelso and Forego - the great geldings with whom he was often compared - frequently had to tote weights above 130, John Hemy never carried more than 127 in his last two years of racing.

But his greatest asset was an indomitable competitive spirit. In 1981, he earned his first horse of the year title with consecutive victories in the Arlington Million, the Jockey Club Gold Cup and the Oak Tree Invitational. His margins of victory were a nose, a head and a neck. He was a horse who wouldn't

First hart warning Key Kriser finally on base unmire Ken Kaiser finally escorted Weaver off the field. Meanwhile, pitcher Mike Smithson had been cooling his heels in the Minnesota dugout. Manager Ray Miller, the pitching coach in Baltimore before being hired in mid-season by the Twins, filed a protest because Ford did not give Smithson a chance to warm up af-ter the delay. Said Miller: "I think there should be a limit as to how long a guy can argue."

Smithson went on to scatter eight hits in his six immings and register his fourth straight victory.

Gone With the Scribes

By Russell Baker NEW YORK —It's been a long time since anybody in the United States has called baseball "the national pastime." People under 30 may doubt that anybody ever did so, yet such is the truth.

All summer long radio voices and sportswriters vibrated about "the national pastime." As summer ended, "the national pastime" culminated in "the fall classic." That was the World Series.

It's been a long time since any-body called the World Series "the fall classic," except for the occasional aging sportswriter who learned his cliches in the days when sportswriters were called "the

It's been a long, long time since anybody called sportswriters ties that might be more properly

When baseball was, as Red Smith used to say, just a game that children can play, it bred a child-hood language bloated with zest and malarkey, a circus language used by Barnum's disciples to wink at the crowd as if to say, "Look, we all know this is hokum, but isn't it

Behind the gaudy lingo was a sophisticated view of life in which dignified language was deemed un-fit for matters that were basically bunkum — like baseball.

Now, though, we have "the sports industry," which is not — definitely not — just games that children can play. This is high-stakes capitalism. Lawyers, accountants, agents, physicians, judges, arbitrators, labor leaders often take up more of the sports page than the players. That's fun? There was a lovely illustration of the grown-up state of affairs a few weeks back when Howard Cosell, on ABC's "Monday Night Base-ball," asked Dave Winfield of the New York Yankees if there was bad blood between him and the Yankees owner, George Steinbrenner. Cosell was trying to infuse a bit of boyish zest into a very dull TV game, but Winfield was having

He smiled tolerantly at the ques-tion, as one might smile at a child who'd been asked if eating spinach would make him as strong as Popeye, and said, "It's just business,

As Calvin Coolidge observed, business is the business of America. Business is for grown-ups; business is for big bucks; business is not for Business, being serious, required a serious language to match its gravity. Sportswriters — no longer "the scribes" — had to concede that calling baseball "the national pastime" was misleading nonsense.

For years dull people who read newspapers with straight faces had been writing editors to argue that since horse-racing attendance far exceeded baseball's, it would be more accurate to call horse racing "the national pastime."

More cynical types observed that there were dozens of other activicalled "the national pastime." Which had always been true. "The scribes" had always known this truth but had risen above it because they knew a higher truth; to wit, that the pursuit of truth has noth-ing to do with fun at the ball park. Even in the time of "the scribes," everybody knew it was silly to call the World Series "the fall classic," but talking silly was part of the pleasure adults took from sports children could play.

The fact about the World Series was that it was not a classic but a prime-time television special performed at the end of a complicated playoff schedule that was likely to produce a contest between mismatched teams on cold, late-fall nights that often feel more wintry than autumnal.

when they were just games that

As in other divisions of the sports industry, television riches have produced comically bloated salaries so that journeyman performers receive hundreds of thousands of dollars for eight months of mediocre work. Most people can no more grasp why players getting such gravy ought to be on strike than they can understand why the owners are angry because the players won't make them stop paying such outrageous salaries.

This is business as incomprehensible to most as the corporate rating game businessmen play in Wall Street. Business - hey, there's an authentic national pastime.

Elizabeth David, the Master of the Laconic Recipe

By Charles Rosen

SOME of the recipes in Elizabeth David's first book, "Mediterranean Food," published in 1950 and said to have completely transformed the eating habits of the British upper middle class, were picturesque rather than practical. The Greek dish called picti, or brawn (headcheese), is one example:

"A pig's head is boiled for hours in water strongly flavoured with bay leaves and peppercorns. "When cooked it is cut up into chunks, the juice of 3 or 4 lemons is added to the strained stock, which is poured over the brawn, arranged in large earthenware basins, and left to set. "Not very elegant, but usually very good. Many of the other recipes in the book are more easily negotiated, but the improbable ones are not beside the point if one wishes to understand Elizabeth David's charm. Within a few years of the appearance of "Mediterranean Food," and above all with the publication of "French Provincial Cooking" in 1960, she was accepted by many as the most important living writer on food. This position is confirmed by her new book of essays, "An Omelette and a Glass of Wine" (Viking, $18,95), a collection of her articles over the last 35 years.

David's supremacy does not come from her style — which is serviceable, plain and a little brusque — or from any attempt to write fancy prose. Although she often reminisces about places she has visited and meals she has eaten (particularly French Provençal meals that represent the cooking she knows best), this is not a significant part of her writ-

David's basic medium of expression is the recipe. David treats the form somewhat highhandedly, but her mastery of it is evident, and she presupposes a reciprocal mastery on the part of her readers. The directions tend to the laconic: "simmer until done"; "cook in a moderate oven." Beginners might be advised not to start with her book. Cooking is learned above all by watching other people and by tri-al and error. More significantly, the finest recipes do not always

Elizabeth David: "That is the authentic recipe. One of them anyhow."

This is particularly true with David. Not only were the more improbable recipes beyond the grasp of her original readers, so were most of the ordinary ones. She admits it in the preface to the Penguin edition of "Mediterranean Food":

"This book first appeared in 1950, when almost every essential ingredient of good cooking was either rationed or unobtainable. To produce the simplest meal consisting of even two or three genuine dishes required the utmost ingenuity and devotion. But even if people could not very of-ten make the dishes here de-scribed, it was stimulating to think about them; to escape from the deadly boredom of queuing and the frustration of buying the weekly rations; to read about real food cooked with wine and olive oil, eggs and butter and cream, and dishes richly flavoured with onions, garlic, herbs, and brightly coloured southern vegetables." David spent the war years in Cairo and Alexandria, Egypt, and had been a student in Paris. "Mediterranean Food" made the past come alive again, and it did so the way poetry evokes an exot-ic or long-vanished ambience.

This is why the most extravagant of David's recipes are as revealing as those that can be more inspire the most sympathetic easily realized. In fact, some of existence of the Catalan peasant reader to cook — or even to eat. the most difficult are, paradoxically, the simplest to carry out. She describes the reaction to one in her new book:

"On page 96 of 'French Country Cooking' is a four line description of el pa y all, the French Catalan peasant's one-time morning meal of a hunk of fresh bread rubbed with garlic and moistened with fruity olive oil. When the book first appeared in 1951, one reviewer remarked rather tartly that she hoped we British would never be reduced to breakfasting off so primitive a dish. I was shaken, not to say shocked - I still am by the smug expression of Brit-ish superiority and by the revela-tion, unconscious, of the reviewer's innocence. Believing, no doubt, that a breakfast of bacon and eggs, sausages, toast, butter, marmalade and sweetened tea has always been every Englishman's birthright, she ignored countless generations of farm labourers, mill workers, miners, schoolboys, whose sole sustenance before setting off for a long day's work was nothing more substantial than a crust of coarse bread or an oatcake broken up in milk, buttermilk, or when times were good, in thin broth, when bad in water." We might notice here the perhaps unintentional contrast between the drab English life evoked by "a crust of coarse bread" and the simple but spicy rubbed with garlic," This is not a breakfast difficult to make — except that the old-fashioned bread that makes a decent basis for rubbing with garlic is by now more nearly impossible to find in the French countryside than in New York or Paris, and expensive wherever it turns up. David is a writer of pastoral, as are many of the finest writers on cookery. Pastoral is a literary form that evokes a golden age, a time when life was uncomplicated and pleasures were simple. Good cookbooks may introduce us to exotic cuisines and transport us to the romantic Orient (or Scandinavia or Latin America) without our setting a foot outside the door, but the cookbooks that touch the heart most strongly are those that take us back in time — to mother's cooking and childhood memories or to an ancient and more splendid age.

David wishes to return to a mythical past — when food was fresh, unadulterated by chemical preservatives, unspoiled by sham and pretentiousness. It is this ical element in her work that explains its emotional power.

The greatest influence on ber is perhaps Edouard de Pomiane, a researcher at the Institut Pasteur in Paris who gave informal talks about cooking on French radio in the 1930s. His was a cookery of friendship. He once wrote that there are three kinds of dinners: business dinners, those given to return invitations and dinners for friends. Business dinners should be catered, he recommended (nobody will like the food anyway). As for dinners to return invitations, Pomiane knew nothing of them: His friends never invited him, he said, because they all wanted to eat at his house. His recipes are filled with his desire to please his friends, not to impress or dazzle them.

David's cookery is less generous than Pomiane's, although she has used his great recipe for saddle of hare with cream and acidulated beets for years and observes ironically that the star of nouvelle cuisine, Michel Guérard, has taken it up recently. She has, however, inherited Pomiane's offhand humor. In an essay entitled "Exi-gez le Véritable Cheddar Français" ("Demand Real French Cheddar"), she gives a recipe for a fondue far less indigestible than the uncompromising Swiss ver-sion, and adds dryly, "Well, that is the authentic recipe. One of them anyhow."

Excerpted from an article in The New York Times by Charles Rosen, a pianist and teacher at the State University of New York in Stony Brook.

Mel Fisher, whose divers are see hauling up the first part of an esti-mated $400 million worth of 2016 and silver from a Spanish galleon that sank near Key West, has local. ed another major treasure trote 300 miles (490 kilometers) away "After spending the whole day our here off Key West, bringing up too. of silver bars. I went out last night and celebrated, and then I'm told my crew from Fort Pierce had just hit it also," Fisher said. The book from the wreckage, just off Fort Pierce, included a double-handled gold cup etched with rabbits and peacocks, a gold snake bracelet and hundreds of gold doublooms worth an estimated $5,000 each. Fisher and his Treasure Salvors Inc. had just completed a 15-year search for the royal Spanish galleon Nuestra Señora de Atocha, which sank ma hurricane in 1622, when they found wreckage that may be from five treasure ships, half of a fleet that went down in 1715. Fisher's cress have been working in the area of the first five ships, hauling up about 7,000 silver coins from our wreck alone. The new treasures were amid wreckage far from the original five, indicating that the missing five might be close by At the Key West wreck. Fisher said his team had brought up more than 200 silver bars by Sunday and lost count by Monday.

"When I saw the Herod Atticus theater here. I knew it was the perfect place for 'Priam.' Its semi-circular stage and the enormous arch. es in the background are a wonderful setting, the British composer Sir Michael Tippett, 80, said in Athens after his opera "King Priam" was staged in the ancient theater. Tipton said the Herod Atticus could have been built especially for "King Priam." The opera's story, from the Iliad of Homer, tells of a king of Troy was had to live with a prophecy that his son, Paris, would be the cause of his death. The open-air theater at the foot of the Acropolis was built in A. D. 161 by Herod Attiens, a parton of the arts and consul of Rome in memory of his wife. The conductor of the Athens performance, by the Royal Opera, was Elgar Howarth — who in 1962 at "King Priam's" world premiere, played the work's opening note on second
